Durovs' VKontakte found a lot of success letting developers build alternate versions of its site. More importantly, Telegram operates as a non-profit organization, and doesn't plan to charge for its services.

"Telegram is not intended to bring revenue, it will never sell ads or accept outside investment. It also cannot be sold," the company writes in its FAQ. "We're not building a 'user base,' we are building a messenger for the people." If Telegram ever "runs out" of the money supplied by the Durov brothers, the company says, it will ask for donations from its users. Telegram's noble goals echo the sentiments of many bright-eyed
